Welcome to the World of Water, whereby water is gold, and its security is a prized possession as well a symbol of good health, good fortune and long life to communities living without the provision of potable drinking water in rural Sierra Leone, West Africa.

Simwatachela Sustainable Agricultural and Arts Program (SSAAP), is a 501(c)3 service organization registered in U.S.A. but living and working in the field in rural Sierra Leone and Zambia. Join us for a live interview with Heather Cumming in Sierra Leone, Director and Founder SSAAP. She will be speaking about the origin of Simwatachela Sustainable Agricultural and Arts Program (SSAAP): how it began, and why SSAAP will always prioritize water and food as it's #1/#2 priorities (above education, income-generation, technology, etc.).

Heather says: “A friend of mine in Pueblo, Colorado, recently discovered that we don’t have running water here in Sierra Leone. This was my response to him: ‘If I ever get a house in U.S.A. (which I still hold out hope to have), I don’t want running water. I will find a way to get a well drilled. Running water causes too many problems: flooding, ruining carpet, floorboards, etc. such expense and waste. Not having running water is something I prefer; you waste less water when you can feel its weight: fetching it from a well, or carrying it. Water is heavy! Running water makes us waste it more; I am guilty of that, in U.S.A. – I waste so much water when I take a shower or a huge bubble bath.”
